Dear Johanna Markind:

To date I have not received any communication from you nor your office - U.S. Parole Commission. Therefore, I am assuming that your agency is investigating my torture in Brazil.

Attached for your review and file is an article that appeared within the magazine "THE WEEK", on June 1, 2012, Page 6, entitled "Brasilia, Brazil":

"Torture payout for president: Brazilian President DJILMA ROUSSEFF received $10,000.00 from the state last week as compensation for having been tortured when she was a leftist guerrilla. After joining the fight against Brazil's military dictatorship as a teenager, Rousseff was captured in 1969 and repeatedly tortured for three years. She has always insisted that she never killed anyone during the civil conflict, and donated the money to an anti-torture charity. Rousseff has created a SEVEN-MEMBER TRUTH COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE HUMAN-rights abuses under the dictatorship. 'We are not motivated by revenge, hate, or a desire to rewrite history,' Rousseff said. "THE NEED TO KNOW THE FULL TRUTH IS WHAT MOVES US." (emphasis added)

May I suggest that the U.S. Parole Commission contact the "SEVEN-MEMBER TRUTH COMMISSION", as stated above, for assistance in your investigation. One would think that the commission would have access to records and investigative persons that would assist you.

Thank you for your continued assistance in this matter.

Sincerely,

John Gregory Lambros

a Greek exit from the euro, Reuters reported this week. That scenario is looking more likely because of a standoff within the EU over whether and how to help Greece. New French President François Hollande, backed by Spanish and Italian leaders, strongly favors issuing new, Europe-wide bonds, but German Chancellor Angela Merkel insists that the euro countries form a tighter fiscal union first. Lucas Papademos, caretaker prime minister of Greece until last month's elections resulted in a fragmented parliament, said that if Greece left the euro, the consequences for his country and the rest of the EU would be "profound" and "catastrophic."

Where's the bandwidth? More than a year after the first fiber-optic cable reached Cuba, the island nation still has no high-speed Internet connection. The undersea cable, laid from Venezuela last year with much fanfare and praised by retired dictator Fidel Castro, has never gone online. Cubans speaking anonymously told the Associated Press this week that embezzlement and corruption had strangled the project. Several top telecom officials were arrested, but there's been no more official discussion of the project. The cable was intended to provide high-speed Internet access to schools, hospitals, and government offices, not to home computers.
